

The Legal Ramifications Surrounding Social Media for Students and Staff

The proliferation of electronic media in schools, both as a teaching tool as well as a means of communication, has been a blessing as well as a curse. In addition to all of its well-established positive aspects, it has also blurred the lines of acceptable communication between students, between students and their teachers, and between students and anonymous users. This workshop, designed for school administrators, introduces participants to the legal issues surrounding social media. It focuses on the liability school districts may face for inadequate regulation, as well as the constitutional limits school districts may face as they create social media policies. The workshop concludes with an opportunity for administrators to begin the process of drafting a legally defensible social media policy.
